Future directions of ENVIRONET work

The Secretariat will outline key features of ENVIRONET in its current form and options for changes.

Link to important upcoming events UNFCCC COP17 in Durban – December 2011

Planned activities:

The ENVIRONET Secretariat together with colleagues from the Environment Directorate will undertake the following actions to inform members in their preparations for COP17:

- Examine the set up and implications of the Transitional Committee for the Climate Green Fund and how the OECD could support developing countries to be active in this Committee.
- Examine the relationship between low carbon development strategies and sustainable development strategies.
- Examine how the Rio Markers for climate change can be more widely communicated and applied.

Desired outcomes:

- Agreement on a set of principles to guide climate change financing, drawing on the lessons learned from aid effectiveness.
- Improved understanding of the costs and benefits of low carbon development strategies.
- Improved understanding of the Rio Markers and how they could serve the future framework of Monitoring, Reporting and Verification.

Planned activities:

- Prepare an overview of ENVIRONET work related to the Rio2012 themes.
- Undertake analytical work on the implications of OECD countries' Green Growth measures on developing countries.
- Produce a Policy Paper on the role of development co-operation to support developing countries to design and implement green growth strategies, as well as benefit from the potential opportunities such strategies could bring.

Desired outcome: The Policy Paper will be taken forward by the ENVIRONET members to the Rio2012 Conference. The objective is to inform the Rio2012 discussions with respect to the role that development co-operation can play to promote green growth, poverty reduction and sustainable development agenda in developing countries.

Action required: For discussion.

Item 4. Climate Change Finance: Lessons from Development Experience

Climate change finance pledged by OECD countries brings opportunities to address both climate and development objectives; however, the pressure to rapidly disburse this large amount of funding is resulting in inadequate attention to the lessons learned from experience in delivering ODA over the past 50 years. To ensure the effective use of this financing it is critical to apply the lessons of aid effectiveness: avoid fragmentation and proliferation of financing sources, ensure the activities to be funded are demand-driven and contribute to development, and ensure that countries have effective public financial management capacities to absorb and track this financing.

The Secretariat will provide an update of its current work on climate financing and aid effectiveness in Asia and Africa and an outline of how this issue will be addressed at HLF-4.

Action required: For discussion.

- Please come ready to highlight your own agencies experience in the delivery of climate change finance and your own ideas on how to develop key principles to inform climate change finance.
